

CONTINUING PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION (CPE) Webinar Series

Animal Welfare in the Veterinary Clinic

Animal welfare - beyond good and bad animal health

Session 1: 10 April 2018, Tuesday

People who work in a veterinary clinical setting have to deal with many animal welfare issues every day, in ways that they feel are well-informed and well intentioned. The first session in this webinar series discusses these issues, the importance of the roles all those who assist the veterinary practitioner in the clinic and how they can improve the welfare of their patients for better treatment outcomes.

Animal welfare & ethics in practical context

Session 2: 2 May 2018, Wednesday

All of us who care about and work with animals want to make a difference for the better. To do this is a balancing act involving animal needs, human needs and society's expectations. This 2nd session will broaden the discussions from the 1st session. Through case studies of animal issues we commonly come across in our Society, we will at look the welfare and ethical concerns, how they are often conflicting, yet a decision must be reached, explained and justified.

Speaker: Dr Natasha LEE

Dr Natasha Lee is a veterinarian with over 14 years of experience in animal welfare. She started her career managing the first high-volume high-quality neuter clinic in Malaysia before working at the international level. Her experiences with companion animal welfare include managing several large-scale dog population control projects in Asia, as well as advocating animal welfare to governments and organisations on humane approaches using science-based, comprehensive, and participatory methods. Dr Lee also has experience leading a campaign to include animal welfare science into veterinary curricula across Asia. She provided training to more than half of the 250 veterinary schools in Asia, started a network of animal welfare educators, and conducted online courses for vets. She is currently an independent animal welfare consultant and is on the World Small Animal Veterinary Association's Animal Wellness and Welfare Committee.
