國際關係中的中國

China in World Affairs

China is CREATIVE, but state control over society can be SMOTHERING.

China is DYNAMIC, but the population is AGING faster than any population in history.

China is ENTREPRENEURIAL, but the private sector is GASPING for financial capital.

China is GROWING, but the economy is also now CHOKING on debt.

China is RISING, but in the process ALARMING some of its Asian neighbors.

Which path will China take in the years ahead?

What do students say?

“Studying the rise of contemporary China may seem intimidating given its long history and complex political and economic system. This course is a good starting point to learn about China. The instructors will not teach you what China was, is and will be like. Instead, they provide you with the information and let you be the judge; or in Deng’s words – to let you ““seek truth from facts””.”

--- Patrick Lee, Hong Kong
Business Economics

“China is making a name for itself in the world. The journey of China is a story of continued struggles to become a successful rival to the United States. This course helps students look at China from a whole new perspective from Mao to Xi where you can never know enough.”

--- Tasma Ahmed, Pakistan
English

“China, as a growing global power in this world, is a multifaceted and complicated country. The intellectual complexity of its history, political and diplomatic strategies does not only arouse my curiosity in China’s domestic development, but also triggers my appetite for studying international relations. This course has definitely broadened my international horizon.”

--- Samuel Wong, Hong Kong
Law

“In the context of my exchange semester in Hong Kong, I wanted to learn more about the history of China, and make my own opinion on how China’s economy and political system will evolve in the following decades. The professor gave us very valuable insights on the various historical, societal and ongoing economic issues in China. I would recommend this class to anyone who wants to discover all the different aspects of the Middle Kingdom.”

--- Florent Cayer-Barrioz, France
International Relations

“This course provides a global perspective of China’s issues and arouses my curiosity in researching China’s relations with other countries. It is ideal for students who are interested in historical, political and economic development in China.”

--- Dongzhou Li, China
